To Whom It May Concern:

Jiashu Wu was a mentor of INFO1103 -- Introduction to Programming -- unit in the School of Information Technologies Mentor Program, Semester 1, 2017.

The program was designed to assist first year students enrolled in the School with the transition from high school to university. Mentors complemented existing tutors and lecturers in first year units by assisting students in technical, personal and administrative areas. Mentors volunteered at least one hour per week to participate in the program, in addition to managing their own university studies.

During the program, Jiashu demonstrated and developed skills in communication, presentation and interpersonal relations. Successful participation in the program also required organisational skills and commitment. Furthermore, Jiashu has now developed some basic skills for teaching others to understand new concepts.

We consider Jiashu to be a good mentor, who demonstrated very high standards of knowledgeability, approachability and overall proficiency and usually devoted extra time and energy into providing excellent standards of support for students.

The School congratulates Jiashu for demonstrating such excellent standards and would like to offer best wishes for any future endeavours.

Yours sincerely
